Inside the box are a Bible, a copy of Luther's Catechism, the Augsburg Confession, a history of Mt. Hope church, a history of the Women's Guild, of the Walther League and of the Couples Club, the names of the officers of the societies, and a church membership list.

In the comprehensive plan is a swimming garage, a playground, a tennis court with all appurtenances such as walks, fences, a bath house complete with shower facilities which are required by the state for use with a swimming pool, also some picnic tables. A drive for funds which could be spread over a three year period will begin sometime next spring. Named as co-chairman for the fund drive were Dr. J. F. Cook and Robert Strong. The drive will be made during the winter and everything will be not to go in the early spring.

Kiwanis Club Notes

Nine members of the Cadillac Kiwanis Club were in attendance at Monday night's meeting of the Kiwanis Club of Graying for an inter-club meeting. After gaining this weight, she is to be delivered to another Kiwanis Club at least fifty miles away from Graying. Maggiori weighs 35 pounds from her present 25 pounds. At this time, the club holding her will put on a food and invite all clubs in the district to help out. Maggiori is a pig.

Added 60,000 To Hunt In Special Season

Added 60,000 To Hunt In Special Season

Sunday, November 15, is the target date for more than 400,000 hunters expected to open Michigan's regular and special firearm deer season. An estimated 400,000 hunters will take to the woods during the November 15-30 season and the December 1-8 special season in an area of Allegan county. Liberalized special season measures, together with archery take and buck kill, are designed to raise the whitetail harvest to last year's figure of 175,000. An increase has been made in special hunting permits and areas covered under "any deer" shooting in an effort to ward off heavy deer losses this winter. In many areas, the deer herd is being fed in large bodies over-browsed last winter. Much of this will not recover sufficiently to carry the present herd, estimated at more than 700,000 animals, through the 1959-60 winter.

Added 60,000 To Hunt In Special Season

Approximately 100,000 special permits were issued this week for "any deer" hunting in 30 crop-damaged and food-shortage areas which cover 18,487 square miles. Last year, 13,670 square miles fell under special seasons while 55,269 hunters were issued permits. Permits shot 26,000 antlers deer in 1958; they are expected to harvest 45,830 this year. Conservation Department game men look for a slight increase in take but a drop from 78,000 to about 68,000 in buck kill. As in the past, Department biologists will be busy during and after the season, compiling information which will help shape deer management programs. Successful hunters are urged to stop at one of the Department's various roadside biological check-out stations to have their deer weighed and antler data. These stations will be located at Standish, Sanford, Mt. Pleasant, Morley, White Cloud and the Straits of Mackinac. Information gained at these points gives game men an insight to the general physical condition of deer, particularly those in trouble areas of the range. Traffic surveys will be conducted to measure deer movement and observations will be made at lockers and hunting camps. Hunters are reminded that the permit is valid only on nearly all state lands and not on Michigan's deer and bear season. Camping information and camp registration cards are available at district and regional headquarters offices at the Conservation Department and from the state's 4,200 license dealers. No fee is charged but hunters must post these cards at their camp sites. These helps officers locate hunters when home smoke and hunting camp and also reduces litter problems. Basic camping facilities are available in more than 100 state forest campgrounds, some 50 national forest campgrounds, 40 state parks and numerous county parks. No charge is made in state and national forests. At state parks, the daily camping fee is $1.00 while the daily charge for private campgrounds is $2.00. Registration fees will be $1.00. Hunters who will not be camping are urged to register at the mentioned Department offices so they also can be reached in case of emergency.

Internal Strife In Both Parties In Michigan

INTERNAL BICKERING is being suppressed in both camps as Republicans and Democrats point for the 1960 elections.

Rebellion within the state GOP is a fact. Lawrence S. Lindner, the state chairman, and Postmaster General Arthur Summerfield, the "conservative" pictured in some circles as losing his grip in Michigan. Much of this has been in the news lately.

Intra-party disputes among Democrats are more subtle.

Personalities, not philosophies, are at odds within Democratic ranks.

The Iron Man of state Democrats, Party Chairman Neil Stabler, has managed to keep the lid on the pot of candidates eager to try for Gov. G. Mennen Williams' seat if he declines to run for a seventh term.

It hasn't been easy with men like Secretary of State James M. Hare, whose strong showing in leading the ticket in the 1958 elections puts him in a commanding position to the 1960 election.

AT LEAST ONE 1959 election winner is not expected to be among the Administrative Board candidates in 1960. Frank S. Szymanski, twice elected Auditor General, resigned to become a private judge.

The incumbent is expected to make a strong candidate a year from now. Otto M. Smith, elevated to the Administrative Board last year, is expected to become chairman of the Public Service Commission, is the first Negro to serve on the Board.

Williams' appointment of Smith was whisked through the Senate after confirmation with almost unprecedented speed. The only objections came from senators who said Smith would be hard to replace on the commission.

STATE MONEY WOES are not the only matters commanding attention of the Administrative Board members this fall.

When the Supreme Court decided a throw out the penny use (sales) tax increase, Attorney General Paul L. Adams, who led the fight to have it tossed out, was arguing a U. S. Supreme Court matter.

Adams was in Chicago for hearings ordered by the nation's highest court on Adams' attempt to divert more water from Lake Michigan.

A victory on the water diversion case, should it come before the Supreme Court, would do much to boost Adams' stature.

Power, navigation, recreation and fishery interests have a vital interest in the case, as do all property owners along Michigan's Great Lakes shoreline.

Unlike the tax case, the water diversion case finds almost everyone in Michigan on the same side. Adams' fight against the water "steal" can only win friends here. It's like being against sin.

TRAFFIC SAFETY is a major concern of Secretary of State James M. Hare when he is not wrestling with state fiscal problems or patting his own back in his auto license branch office system.

Hare, once seriously injured in an auto crash, credits his work in traffic safety for his success at the polls.

Michigan has a major traffic safety promotion on tap Nov. 15. It is Safety Sabbath, an interfaith program intended to focus attention on the moral responsibility of the individual driver.

"We need local enthusiasm and an understanding that spiritual serenity and a brotherhood attitude is a basic element in maintaining sound and care-free driving habits," Hare said.

"Un-American" is the brand Son. Edward Hutchinson (R-Fennville) put on one traffic safety proposal submitted by Hare at a Safety Commission meeting.

Hare, who said he was not necessarily endorsing it, submitted a proposal worked out by Dr. F. J. Margolis, Director of the Audio-Visual Department of Wayne State University's Medical School. Under the proposal, motorists would inform on each other by postcard if they see a traffic violation.

Said Hutchinson: "We don't want to institute anything that even begins to resemble the system in Russia and other totalitarian countries where children are told to inform on their parents and neighbors to inform on neighbors for real or suspected acts against the regime."

Hutchinson fears the proposal could lead to abuse through spite.

Craziest Fishing Ever

By Charles L. Pollnitz

Joe piled his waders, rod, net and coffee thermos next to Pete's equipment in the rear of the station wagon. A moment later the driver clanked gears and turned onto the dark highway. "Hey," yipped Joe, "The AUSAble is the other way." With a grin Pete replied, "We are not going to the AUSAble. Down the road they went amidst a rain of loose fenders, loose doors, and rattling windows.

Joe wondered how far he had to bear this agony. Going fishing some place and not knowing where? or what for? "How much further?" he asked. With a gasp on the road Pete sat hunched over the wheel without answering. Finally he spoke: "About twenty miles," adding, "Know where the river cuts across the road at Foughton Lake?" Joe nodded his head. "Well, one day I said, 'Joe, my boy, some day I'm going to take you where that fly rod of yours can really get a good work out,' and that's where we are headed for."

Joe thought about it a moment and said, "Dang, what are we going to fish, bass or pike?" Pete said, "Neither," and continued with deliberate slowness. "We are going to fish . . . bullfrogs." On Lord, thought the poor bugger, he has gone wandering in the night. With lip turning to sneer, Joe muttered, "Bullfrogs." Fifteen minutes later they crossed the bridge and pulled off the highway.

As the two of them stood next to the car, Joe said, "I thought you were going to try and catch fish. When he wanted froggies for supper he caught them in a net, or smacked them with a stick. Pete gave him a two-cell flashlight and said, 'The guy who showed me this little trick liked to use red trout flies. I find that salmon eggs are much better. They are a brighter and shinier red and seem to have a smell that bullfrogs like.'"

A feeling of excitement began coursing through Joe's body as he thought of the possibilities in bullfrogging. There might be something to this after all. Pete explained how it was done and told him where to try the opposite bank while he worked this side. With flashlight in one hand, and fly rod in the other, Joe crossed the bridge and proceeded along the far bank. He walked quietly. Grass was tall and the air was filled with thick weeds and wild shrub. At the sound of a 'ploip,'

It Can Be Stopped . . .

Reporters at Idlewild Airport stared incredulously at the short, bespectacled man with clipped mustache and gentle smile, just landed in New York in May 1959, writes Andre Visson in the October issue of The Reader's Digest. Antoine Pinay, 57-year-old French Minister of Finance, was assuring them that he had not come to the United States in search of loans or credits. "Why should I beg for more dollars?" he said. "I did not even have to use the 450 million made available to us four months ago, when I announced plans to put our financial house in order."

This attitude, in the present state of the world, was enough to make even the most sophisticated newsmen incredulous. But Mr. Pinay, as he went on to explain at Idlewild, had produced something of an economic miracle. The French Treasury's dollar reserve, which had steadily declined in the past, had shown a sharp upward movement. And the black-market rate on the dollar was actually lower than the official rate.

Mr. Visson's article is entitled "The Man Who Stopped Inflation in France." French prices had been rising and the franc weakening for more than a generation. Many experts had thought the French economy impossible, with something resembling national bankruptcy a future inevitability. Yet, it seems, Mr. Pinay has confounded them.

His career, as recounted by Mr. Visson, has been remarkable. As manager of a tannery, his employee relations were exceptional. In 1939, he became mayor of a French city and inaugurated all manner of needed municipal improvements without raising taxes. In 1939 he went to the Chamber of Deputies, and was one of the first conservatives to be elected from a workers' district. He was one of the organizers of a new Independent Party opposing socialism. In the postwar era he held posts in four cabinets and in 1952, when France was in a disastrous financial position, he took over the reigns of Government. Writes Mr. Visson, "His first objective was to stop inflation. To balance the nation's budget, he cut expenditures instead of raising taxes." The French Treasury took on a healthy look. Even so, Pinay was voted out of office, and assumed the post of Foreign Minister.

Then Pinay joined forces with General De Gaulle, as Minister of Finance and Economic Affairs. He has fought inflation and fought it to a standstill. His program, writes Mr. Visson, "involves austerity and sacrifice." Innumerable government subsidies have been abolished. Significantly, labor contracts in which wages are tied to the cost-of-living index also have disappeared—as Mr. Pinay sees it, "it is absurd to have the price of coal, steel and movie tickets determine the price of eggs and milk—that merely makes the inflation steamroller roll even faster." He stands for tax simplification, tax reform, and a balanced national budget, as the essential conditions for a stable currency.

To quote Mr. Visson once again, "The victory over inflation still has to be consolidated. It will prove lasting only if De Gaulle's regime succeeds in halting the new upsurge of prices and the new wage demands of French workers. This implies further sacrifices. But no sacrifices are too hard, says Pinay, if they have also felt the corrosive grip of inflation, which with particular interest—and with hope—Pinay's experiment in France."

"Sizing-up" the Situation

When a lady in our town's looking for a new dress . . . her first target is Sandy Philip's Shop. The other day I finally asked Sandy how come he's been so successful.

"Well," Sandy said, "I've always treated my customers with courtesy. And my secret ingredient—which isn't really a secret—is flattery."

"Whenever a new shipment of dresses comes in, I cut off the size markers in every dress—and make them a size smaller. Size 16 becomes size 14 and so on. Course, all the ladies know I change the number—but they like it. Helps them pretend their figures are a little better than they really are."

From where I sit, we all like to think the best of ourselves—often "shrink" the truth to do it. Reminds me of people who claim they're not prejudiced then turn around and argue against a neighbor's choice of a glass of beer. Even a little intolerance is too much in a person of fit a town—and that's exactly the size of it.

Gentlemen:
I wish to submit the following question on your fuel oil requirements for the year of 1959-60. My quotation is based on the tank wagon price in effect at Grayling on the day of delivery, less a discount of 2.7c per gallon, which would result in a net price today of 13.2c per gallon for standard furnace oil with out Sta-Clean additive.

I wish to thank you for this opportunity to bid on your fuel oil requirements.

ERRICK STEPHAN IN DOUBLE RING CEREMONY

Miss Deanne Marie Herrick became the bride of John Albert Stephan in a double-ring ceremony performed at seven o'clock on Saturday, November 14, at the Michigan Memorial Church.

The groom's father, Norval Stephan, priest of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, was the officiating minister. Mrs. Clarence C. Clippert presided at the organ, and Mrs. Bernard Fowler, sister of the groom, sang two numbers, "The Wedding Prayer," and "O Perfect Love." Bouquets of cedar and chrysanthemums decorated the bride's table, and a display of dogwood and spruce topped the chancel rail.

Given in marriage by her father, Gerald Herrick of Mt. Pleasant, the bride made a lovely appearance in her gown of imported Chantilly lace and nylon tulle. The fitted bodice featured a Sabrina neckline encrusted with iridescent, and wrist point sleeves. The full skirt fell in lace-geared tiers of nylon tulle sparkling with iridescent, and gold sequins, ending in a chapel train. Her crown of pearls and iridescent secured a fingertip length veil of white tulle. She carried a white Bible topped with a white orchid and Stephanus.

Mrs. Raymond Harris of Pontiac, sister of the bride, was her matron of honor. She was attired in a melon colored nylon chiffon gown with a scoop neckline, shirred empire bodice and softly draped waist-length skirt accented at the waist with a satin midriff extending to a tailored bow in the back. A matching feathered headpiece with a circular veil, and short white gloves completed her attire. She carried an arrangement of Johanna Hill roses and English ivy tied with matching streamers.

Ronald Larson was chosen by the bridegroom as best man. Seating the one hundred seventy-five guests were Raymond Harris, the bride's brother-in-law, and Bernard Fowler, brother-in-law to the bridegroom.

The bride's mother greeted her guests in a dress of candy pink velvet with matching accessories. Her corsage of white roses was pinned to her purse. The bridegroom's mother chose a beige ensemble with brown and gold accessories. She wore a red rose corsage.

DAVID WILLARD CROWNED

Miss Patricia Davis, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William H. Davis of Traverse City, was crowned Miss Mary's church in Grayling, in an 11 o'clock double-ring ceremony on Saturday, October 24th.

The Rev. Fr. Joseph Sakowski performed the ceremony before approximately six hundred guests. White gladioli and yellow chrysanthemums were used for decorations. Miss Greta Rasmussen played the organ and the St. Mary's adult choir sang.

Miss Davis' bridal gown was of imported hand-clipped Chantilly lace in a delicate rosepoint pattern featuring a deep scalloped sweetheart neckline enriched by tiny beaded sequins. The fitted bodice topped a bouffant skirt which ended in the traditional chapel train softly scalloped to match the detail of the neckline. Accenting the gown were long tapered sleeves ending in wrist points. The bride's fingertip-length veil of French illusion fell from a crown of Chantilly type lace embellished with beaded sequins and tiny seed pearls. She wore a pearl necklace, and carried a cascade bouquet of cymbidium orchids.

Attending the bride were Miss Patricia Dipinski of Vanderbilt, her cousin, a maid of honor, and bridesmaids, Mrs. Shirley Moorehead, the groom's sister and Miss Frankie Severen, both of Grayling.

All wore sheath gowns of organza over tulle. Miss Dipinski wore Capucine organza over tulle, and Miss Severen champagne over tulle.
